

How to get the most out of your garden

Description

How do you make the most of your gardening space? That question is tackled through a Gardening Club run by horticultural therapy charity Thrive.

Delivered straight to your inbox, Gardening Club's fortnightly email is designed to make gardening accessible and enjoyable for everyone.

Spending time in a garden has positive effects on wellbeing

Easy to follow, simple step-by-step instructions and pictures offer to guide people through any gardening activity. The service includes:

- activities for your children or grandchildren;
- tips to help garden if you have a disability or long-term health condition;
- information about how gardening can keep you healthy and feeling well.

For those who don't have their own garden to enjoy, Thrive show how people can still access the benefits of connecting with nature.

The charity claim that keeping active, spending time in a garden and nature are all proven to have positive effects on physical and mental wellbeing. Such activity can also help to reduce feelings of isolation and loneliness.

With 40 years of experience behind them, Thrive say they understand how gardening can bring about a profound positive change and can help people and those they care for through periods of difficulty.

Gardening can help you get back on top of things

Gardening can help you get back on top of things and restore balance, Thrive point out. It can make you feel happier, more confident and healthier. Age, ill-health or disability should not be barriers to your enjoyment.
